How long does an UPS battery last?

Last Modified: 2024-03-26 02:45 AM Under normal use, a UPS battery will typically last around 3 - 5 years, but the life of the UPS itself might vary depending on the environment it's used in. Like everything else, the harder a UPS is worked (the more surges and power outages it works through), the less overall life you might get out of it.

What if the batteries go bad in my APC ups during warranty?

If the batteries go bad in your APC UPS during the warranty, one should do nothing other than contact APC, because the battery is covered under warranty and APC will cover the repair at no cost.

When should I replace my ups battery?

Randomly pick a two units then connect two 75W light bulbs. If you get substantially less runtime than 20 minutes from both units before it loses power, it's time for a mass battery replacement for similarly aged UPS in your department, control, etc that haven't had the batteries changed.

Can I use an unapproved battery for my ups?

These battery manufacturers have been approved following extensive DVT testing of the UPS. Use of batteries manufactured by unapproved battery manufacturers, will result in sku'd runtimes, recharge times, as well as possible battery damage. Using a certified APC replacement RBC will ensure the UPS will operate as designed.

How long does an APC battery last?

Also, with a new APC battery you will be guaranteed techsupport and a 1 year warranty. Posted: 2021-06-28 07:13 PM . Can a warranty provider void a third party warranty?

The warranty provider does not have to warrant the third party component and can only void warranty on other parts only if they could reasonably demonstrate that the third party component was the cause of the failure. Also, the warranty provider can not employ tie-in sales provision with a requisite of using OEM parts to keep the warranty valid.
