Why has Niger expelled three Chinese oil executives?

NIAMEY, Niger — In a move that signals a deepening shift toward economic nationalism, Niger's military government has expelled three senior Chinese oil executives, further asserting control over the country's natural resources.

Are Chinese officials leaving Niger?

The three officials, all part of a Chinese energy consortium operating in Niger's oil sector, were informed by the government that their presence was no longer welcome and that they were to leave the country immediately.

Why did the junta remove Chinese companies from Niger?

Last August, the junta issued Ordinance No. 2024-34, aimed at ensuring "national wealth goes primarily to the benefit of Nigeriens." The Chinese companies' alleged defiance of this vision made their removal inevitable. It also marks a broader shift in Niger's foreign policy.

Will Chinese oil workers leave Niger?

Niger has asked that some Chinese employees working on oil projects leave the country, documents seen by Reuters on Friday showed, a move that could affect dozens and further strain bilateral ties.

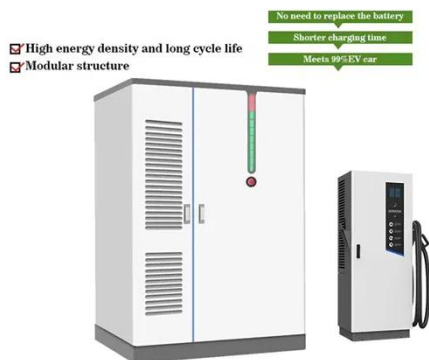

Why did the Nigerien government expel Chinese managers?

The Nigerien government expelled Chinese managers of China National Petroleum Corporation, Zinder Refining Company and the West African Gas Pipeline Company, citing the companies' failure to comply with a 2024 amendment to the mining code, which prioritizes the state's benefit from national resources, local media reported.

Why has Niger been expelled from China?

The expulsion may reflect Niger's desire to assert more control over its natural resources and reduce its dependency on China, while also sending a message to other foreign entities that the country is looking to renegotiate terms for a more equitable partnership. The Chinese government has yet to formally respond to the expulsion order.
